John van der Kamp

Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam,

NETHERLANDS

John is an associate at the Department of Human Movement Sciences of the Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam. He specializes in the learning and development of motor skills in physical education, sports and rehabilitation, but his interests go far beyond that. Among others, he published on soccer penalty kicks, creativity, kissing, re-learning in stroke patients, visual illusions, kinematic of eating hotchpotch, team communication, the education of graduate students and planetary crisis. John finds it increasingly important that humans care for what the planet gives them. He therefore joined Scientist Rebellion, partaking in some of their actions. Becoming an activist, felt also as a responsibility for searching what this means for research and teaching, especially because this is perhaps not straightforward for physical education, sports and human movement science.

John's Topics for the 27th International Teaching Week:

- Motor Learning Theories and Methods: Is There Some Order in the Chaos?
- Journal Club for PhD Students
